

What Impact Can You Have On This Election?

A Vote For ->	Clinton	Trump	Johnson	Stein	A Write-In Candidate	... Or Not Voting
If you ...
Wanted Sanders to win the Democrat nomination and either identify with the Democrat Party platform or feel that it needs to be even more liberal	Increases the odds of continuation of direction set under Obama	Increases the odds of a substantial change in direction for the country	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]
Are glad Clinton is the Democrat nominee and identify with the Democrat Party Platform	Increases the odds of continuation of direction set under Obama	Increases the odds of a substantial change in direction for the country	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]
Wanted a candidate other than Trump to win the Republican nomination and identify with the Republican Party platform or feel that it needs to be even more conservative	Increases the odds of continuation of direction set under Obama	Increases the odds of a substantial change in direction for the country	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]
Are glad Trump is the Republican nominee and identify with the Republican Party Platform	Increases the odds of continuation of direction set under Obama	Increases the odds of a substantial change in direction for the country	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]
Identify with the Libertarian Party platform and want Johnson as your president	Increases the odds of continuation of direction set under Obama	Increases the odds of a substantial change in direction for the country	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]
Identify with the Green Party platform and want Stein as your president	Increases the odds of continuation of direction set under Obama	Increases the odds of a substantial change in direction for the country	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]	[See Note]
Note

You are essentially gambling with your vote. It is quite possible that we may see one of the highest voter turnouts in American history, and that alone would make almost all historical statistics useless as predictors of the outcome on Election Day. The probability that the Trump/Sanders Phenomenon will bring millions of new voters to the polls is at least as high as the probability that disillusionment over the available choices will cause millions to either vote out of desperation for candidates with no chance of winning [Green Party, Libertarian Party, write-ins, etc.] or just stay home and not vote.